Dear Jim and Art,

I had an opportunity to meet with [REDACTED] in the presence of [REDACTED]. It was a pleasure to see him. When I inquired into his program, I got the distinct impression he is making his time count.

One point did come up, however, that surprised me. In the course of telling me how much he appreciated seeing [REDACTED] and evidencing actual uses of the acquisitions in work here, I discovered there is no provision for getting the [REDACTED] together occasionally for an exchange of words and ideas. Don't you feel this would be a constructive move to arrange occasionally, say in London or Paris. The expense would be very small but the benefits for a chap like [REDACTED] would be considerable. Just a thought.

My best to all.

Personal regards,
